Nepenthe

NEPENTHE is a word derived from the Greek, meaning "no-sorrow." A mythical Egyptian drug, it was given by the wife of Thonis, king of Egypt, to Helen, daughter of Jove, to induce forgetfulness, and surcease from sorrow. The word and thought have been used in literature through all time. Homer mentioned it in "The Odyssey" and in "The Raven" Poe said: "Quaff, o quaff this kind Nepenthe and forget the lost Lenore."

May the music on this album help you transcend your sorrows.

Thanks to Everett Matson, Neil Smith of Boosey and Hawkes, Michael Kontaxes, Josiah Gluck, Michael Davenport, Stuart Allyn, Bob Katz and Irving Kolodny.

Special thanks to Deborah for her endless patience and musical taste and for her ability to listen to me noodle all day long.

Special thanks to Larry Rosen for the care he took in helping me present my music on this album, and to my son Josh for playing the blues with me in Santa Fe.

A special, special thanks to Chuck Loeb, John Patitucci, Adam Nussbaum, Dave Weckl, and Sammy Figueroa, whose brilliant playing helped me be myself.

—Eddie Daniels

Special thanks to Gretchen Hoffmann Abene who continues to put all things in the proper perspective despite my continuing insanity; to Suzanne Sherman who always manages to make perfect sense out of all the information thrown at her, usually at the last minute; to Milton Brooks, Stan Wallace, Major, and everyone at A&R Recording Studios; and finally, to Mike Landy for his all-around sense of congeniality.
